However, the deadline has been changed due to website maintenance on July 7th and 8th. So, I'd like to inform you that we've moved the deadline to July 10th. Thank you for understanding, and please don't forget the changed deadline. If you have questions, please visit me in my office. Thank you.

W: Sure, Alex. You surveyed teens about their travel preferences, right?

M: Yes, I did. I've collected data, but I'm not sure how to present the numbers effectively.

W: Let's see. Oh, you just listed all the numbers. Why don't you use charts or graphs, instead? They help present data effectively.

M: Okay. What kind can I use?

W: For example, you can use pie charts or bar graphs.

M: Oh, I didn't think about that.

W: Yeah. Charts and graphs can be helpful. They can represent numbers in a simple image.

M: That's good.

W: Also, they can help people see the relationship between numbers quickly.

M: So, charts and graphs can make data easy to understand.

W: Right. Using those can be effective in presenting data.

M: I got it. Thanks for your help.

M: Well, they've read your poems in my class. Could you read some aloud and explain their meaning?

W: Sure thing. I could explain my writing process, too.

M: Great. Also, my students wrote poems. Maybe you could hear some of them.

W: Absolutely. And I'd like to give a signed copy of my latest poetry book to each of your students.

M: Oh, thank you. That would be such a meaningful gift.

M: I like it. It makes the cafe unique. Hmm, what are these balls in the basket?

W: People can use them to play catch with their dogs.

W: You know we posted a video online about our club last week, right?

M: Sure. I helped make the video. It was a big hit.

[16~17] 다음을 듣고, 물음에 답하십시오.

W: Good morning, students. Previously, we learned about various environments in which plants grow. Today, we'll discuss how plants defend themselves from threat. Even though plants cannot run away from danger, they know how to keep themselves safe. First, many plants, like roses, have sharp thorns. When animals get too close, these thorns cut them, warning them to stay away. Also, plants can create substances that cause a bad taste. When insects attack, for example, tomato plants release chemicals, making their leaves taste bad. Next, some plants form partnerships with insects. For instance, some cherry trees attract ants by making a sweet liquid. The ants guard the tree from enemies to keep this food source safe. Finally, there are plants that generate a poison to protect themselves. For example, certain walnut trees see other nearby trees as a danger, so they produce a poison to prevent the other trees from growing. Now, let's watch a video about these incredible plants.
